The personal, non-commercial use of kangaroo and deer carcasses destroyed under Authorities to Control Wildlife (ATCW) is now permitted. This is consistent with the Government's "Hunting and 4 Wheel Driving Opportunities in Victoria" policy statement announced before the 2006 State election, and is designed to avoid waste by allowing kangaroo and deer parts, including meat and skins, to be taken from the property for which the authorisation was issued. Any ATCW issued to permit shooting of kangaroos or deer contains conditions relating to that decision.

13. Agent to assist the holder of an Authority to Control Wildlife

NOTE: *This page must ONLY be completed by the person wishing to be listed as an agent on an Authority to Control Wildlife

* ONLY one agent may be listed per page

*Agents may only be listed on this, or copies of this page. (Photocopy this page if you wish to use further agents.)

*If you wish to be added to an existing Authority to Control Wildlife, enter the Authority number here:
and fax or post this form to the relevant DSE/DPI office listed on the attached sheet.

Landowner Land Management Self Assessment

This self-assessment is to document measures the property occupier has considered in order to manage their problems caused by native wildlife. Many problems can be resolved using non-lethal measures that may provide more effective solutions than simply resorting to killing wildlife. In general, appropriate non-lethal wildlife management options must be attempted and documented before DSE will consider issuing an Authority to Control Wildlife (ATCW) approving lethal techniques. This form must be returned with your application for an ATCW.

Some common wildlife issues and practical non-lethal approaches

Issue: Kangaroos or Common Wombats damaging fences.

Approach: Destroying the animals causing damage to the fence will not prevent further fence damage by other individuals, and may, in the case of wombats, lead to increased damage when the new occupant of the territory makes its own holes in the fence (it will not necessarily use existing holes). The solution in both cases is to install a gate to protect your fence, permit the movement of the kangaroos or wombats, and prevent the escape of livestock. Suggested designs below.

Issue: Kangaroos competing for food

Approach: Balance your domestic stock density to accommodate some kangaroos. Improve pasture. Control weeds and grazing by rabbits to provide shared food source for stock and kangaroos.

Issue: Possums in roof and/or garden

Approach: If possums are resident inside your roof during the day, the best way to exclude them is by installing a one-way door to allow them out but not back. If a possum nest box is provided, the possum may not persist in attempting to return to the roof space. You may legally trap Common Brushtail Possums that are living in buildings, however trapped possums must then be released on the same property within 50 metres of the capture site on the day of capture. It is not legal to trap possums in the garden or to trap Common Ringtail Possums. Relocation of possums is illegal. If you are woken by possums running across your roof, you may be able to prevent access by pruning trees or by placing collars around tree trunks. DSE is unaware of any repellents that are always effective in preventing possums from eating plants.

Issue: Birds and flying-foxes eating fruit and nut crops (including grapes).

Approach: Netting to exclude birds is by far the best option. Many vineyards now use throw-over netting, having discovered that the large range of scaring devices and shooting do not control damage sufficiently. Back yard fruit and nut trees can be protected from birds and flying-foxes by erecting netting over them, using 40 mm knitted mesh (not nylon monofilament which traps wildlife). The knitted mesh is available from larger nurseries. Some residents enclose their fruit trees in permanent netted structures to guarantee fruit free of damage by birds, bats or possums.

Issue: Wood Ducks (Maned Ducks) fouling farm dams, swimming pools.

Approach: Farm dams from which livestock are excluded are unlikely to have water quality adversely affected by Wood Ducks. Wood Ducks may be deterred from swimming pools by the use of pool covers or by visual screens around the edges of the pool to prevent the birds being able to see potential predators approaching. Dogs trained to harass the ducks without harming them (Border Collies are good), under permit, should make the ducks leave for more peaceful surroundings.
