

DICK OSBORN

Dick Osborn's work portfolio covers 1955-2005. It began tending livestock in England, Australia, and the US. During 1965-1992 he worked in local, state, and national government. Experience at a fourth level includes contributing to an environmental and sustainability accounting working group established in 1995 by the UN's Division for Sustainable Development. His qualifications in economics and environmental science, together with inter-government relations' experience, were applied in consultancies at Griffith University, the University of Canberra, and in the private sector. His part-time research interest at the ANU's Centre for the Public Awareness of Science is in designing communication networks where relatively small numbers of scientists are expected to converse with relatively large numbers of stakeholders.

